							1) UVA's culpability in disparities in our town, especially as it relates to BIPOC wealth and neighborhood impacts. How can they address this legacy of indifference/hostility towards their neighbors/employees/contractors (funds for CCS' ambitious-but-hard-to-fund Public School realignment and renovations?)? 2) Social determinants of health and having a robust community health worker program, especially in low-wealth census tracts. 3) The ethical, environmental, and accessibility implications of perpetuating city planning in a car-centric mindset. 4) Socially-responsible investments of city funds. We cannot externalize costs of the (negative) human impacts that perpetual corporate growth often ignores for the sake of a higher return... regardless of whether that impact is felt in our city or across the planet. We should care about the Universal Human Rights implications of our city's actions everywhere while still being focused on specific grievances of Cville residents.

							Absolutely-all of your topics failed to begin from the brass tacks of funding and adequately trained and supported staff. Please don't make this place more dysfunctional than it already is and begin by looking at our failures to create a functional government. City staff have been waiting for over a decade for adequate leadership and funding. Currently if you are not an English speaker there's no way you could possibly navigate our city departments. All builders know that the building department is so bogged down and in effectual run with a hard of hearing director that they can't get anything done. The wait times on all projects are egregious. Staff have been overbooked for years and now have less support than ever. The city is a true shit show. And coming up with a topic like not enough black staff- when part of Maurice Jones' issue was that he didn't have the intelligence or training even though he was taking courses at UVA for leadership-Clearly indicates how ignorant you are to the causes of the issues plaguing our city
